

INTERCULTURAL COMMUNICATION

Acknowledging the value of cultural diversity in its many forms in research management

This workshop aims to show why and how to take account of cultural values when forming and managing interdisciplinary, international projects. It also tackles matters to do with communicating with different types of stakeholders: what information to convey, when and in what form to meet the different needs of research projects, from scientific publishing to reporting to funders, and not least communicating with different individuals.

Target group Early-stage researchers, e.g. PhD candidates or postdocs.
